

Synopsis

India is better known for brotherhood through out the world. All religions have equal standing. All religious festivals are celebrated with dignified fervours. Eid al-Fitr is one of the Islamic festivals that marks the end of Ramadan, the holy month of fasting from dawn to dusk. Eid is the gifted reward of Allah to his worshippers who maintained distance from Sins and believed in humanity. Muslims join to offer congregational prayer in the first morning of Eid with whole hearted thanks to Allah for blessing them to complete Ramadan. Bowing down and embracing each other shows spiritual and brotherly relations with each other. Eid is not only joyous but also involves blessings for the entire muslim community. Not only the muslims celebrate this festival but also other sections of the society such as Hindus, Sikhs, Christian etc. convey best wish (Mubarak) to Muslim brethren. This gesture depicts how affectionate relationship nurtured with positivity we display and practice for each other's religion.
